ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I would like to express my sincere thanks to my chairperson and academic advisor Associate Professor Nunta Leksawasdi for her scholarly guidance, interest and support; An equal thank goes to Assistant Professor Tatsana Mahanupab, my co-advisor, for her kindness support, and Dr. Sujitra Tiansawad, and Professor Zhang Shulin, my thesis examiners, for their suggestive comments and help.

Sincere appreciation is extended to the people in my home university: Dr. Wang Debing, the president of Beijing Medical University (BMU), Dr. Yao, Jingpeng, Dean of the Faculty of Nursing of BMU, and Ms Zhang, Shaorong, the director of nursing of the Third Teaching Hospital of BMU for their recommendations to get into this program and support throughout my study.

I wish to thank the nursing experts from the Chiang Mai University: Ms. Sunee Junmahasathien, and Assistant professor Marayart Na Nakorn; Ms. Hu, Jie, Associate director of the National Nursing Center of China, Professor Li, Shuran and Director of nursing Ms. Wang Shupeng from the Mental Health Institute of the BMU. They served as a panel of experts in reviewing my research instruments and gave me much support.

IV

The China Medical Board of New York Inc. is acknowledged for providing financial support throughout the program.

Chiang Mai University in Thailand and Xi'an Medical University in China are also acknowledged for conducting the program.

My special thanks go to my family: my sisters, brothers and their families, for their unfailing support and trust in my ability throughout my personal and professional development.

My greatest wish is to dedicate this to the memories of my mother Zhang, Shuling, and father Guo, Shuyuan, for the constant love, education, support and encouragement they had given me. They would be proud.

I extend my gratitude to the personnel in hospitals where this study was conducted and women who participate in my study for their willingness to share information. Without their support my study would not have been successful.
