ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First of all, I wish to thank the people of Huay Khang Village for their hospitality and co-operation during my field visits. Without their patience and assistance, this thesis would not have been possible.

Special thanks are also due to my advisors: Associate Professor Dr. Sanay Yarnasarn, Assistant Professor Dr. Uraivan Tankimyong and Associate Professor Dr. Udom Kerdpibule for carefully reviewing the thesis and for their valuable comments.

My great thanks are also go to the course directors, Associate Professor Seksin Srivatthanukulkit and Associate Professor Dr. Kosum Saichan for their educational arrangement and administrative supports during the course of study.

Chiang Mai University gives me an opportunity to gain a lot of new experiences and several good friends. I would like to thank them for friendship, sociability, and cheerfulness. Moreover, I wish to thank my classmates, who are so friendly and often share lunch and dinner with me.

I am also grateful to the Luang-Prabang Provincial Forestry Office, the Northern Agro-forestry Extension Training Center, and Xieng Ngeun District Agriculture and Forestry Office for providing facilities and data for my research and also to the staffs for the great help in preparation of data for my research.

Finally, I would like to thank the Lao Swedish Forestry Co-operation Program for the financial support to my study, and also my family for indefatigable patience and encouragement.
