ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express my deepest thanks and profound appreciation to Prof. Dr. Yos Santasombat, my academic advisor for his insightful and keen instructions and guidance throughout this study. I would also like to express sincere appreciation to Dr. Santita Ganjanapan, my examining committee member, and Dr. Maria A. Salas, my external committee member for their useful comments and suggestions in guiding me for the development of this thesis.

My deepest thanks are extended to the teachers in the study course of the RCSD; Prof. Dr. Anan Ganjanapan, Prof. Dr. Yos Satasombat, Dr. Chayan Vaddhanaphuti, Ajarn Phrek Gypmantasiti, Dr. Chusak Wittayapark, and Dr. Pinkaew Laungaramsri who introduced me to useful knowledge of sustainable development field during the time of my graduate study. I am thankful to the staff of RCSD for their assistance in accounting for all complicated administrative procedures related to scholarship and visa extension, and credit registration.

My study would not have been possibly without financial support from Ökumenisches Studienwerk e.V. Bochum (ÖSW) that presently is called Evangelischer Entwicklungsdienst (EED) during my graduate study in Chiang Mai University, Thailand. Special thanks are extended to Dr. Konrad Itondo, Ms. Anna Kenz and Mrs. Sabila Raspe who are responsible for consultancy and clearing up questions concerning finance for me.

I am grateful to all my teachers and colleagues of Forestry Faculty of Hue University of Agriculture and Forestry, for their encouragement provided to me during the entire academic duration in Chiang Mai. Especially, I extend my heartfelt thanks to Rector and Vice-rector of Hue University of Agriculture and Forestry as well as Dean of Forestry Faculty for their promotion, and support they extended in providing me this opportunity to attend the graduate program in Sustainable Development.

Many thanks to the farmers and authorities of Giong village and of Huong Huong Nguyen commune as well as to the authorities of A Luoi district and of

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development of Thua Thien Hue province for their support rendered in the gathering data for this study.

I also would like to express my grateful thank to the Vietnamese people residing in Chiang Mai, Thailand for their kind support and help, in particular to Aunt Van, Uncle Chinh and Uncle Khuynh who have taken care of me and encouraged me to overcome difficulties as well as sadness during our time in Chiang Mai.

I sincerely thank Joseph Rickson for editing the English grammar for this thesis, and all of my friendly classmates (My Van, Huy Tuan, Quang Trung, Sayarka Mori, Sengmaw Lahpai., Tham Chen Fye and Boundeth Southavilay) and Vietnamese students in Chiang Mai University who have helped me to gain more confidence during my time in Chiang Mai.

Finally, I send my wholehearted gratitude to my large family; my grandmother, my parents and parents-in-law, my husband, my brothers and sisters, for the love they have extended to me, crossing the boundaries of time and space. Especially, I sincerely appreciate my parents and my husband who on my behalf have taken care my two too small children (my son was four months and my daughter was three years when I left my family to study in Thailand) and encouraged me to overcome difficulties and a fond remembrance of my children during more than two years studying here.
