

PERSISTENCE OF SMALL-SCALE THAI GARLIC PRODUCTION IN THE CONTEXT OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION

YUKI MIYAKE

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN SOCIAL SCIENCE

ลิขสิทธิ์มหาวิทยาลัยเชียงใหม่

Copyright © by Chiang Mai University
All rights reserved
THE GRADUATE SCHOOL
CHIANG MAI UNIVERSITY
MAY 2011

PERSISTENCE OF SMALL-SCALE THAI GARLIC PRODUCTION IN THE CONTEXT OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION

YUKI MIYAKE

A THESIS SUBMITTED TO THE GRADUATE SCHOOL IN PARTIAL FULFILLMENT OF THE REQUIREMENTS FOR THE DEGREE OF
DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY
IN SOCIAL SCIENCE

ลิขสิทธิ์มหาวิทยาลัยเชียงใหม่

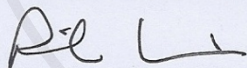

Copyright© by Chiang Mai University
All rights reserved
THE GRADUATE SCHOOL
CHIANG MAI UNIVERSITY
MAY 2011

PERSISTENCE OF SMALL-SCALE THAI GARLIC PRODUCTION IN THE CONTEXT OF TRADE LIBERALIZATION

YUKI MIYAKE

THIS THESIS HAS BEEN APPROVED
TO BE A PARTIAL FULFILLMENT OF THE REQUIREMENTS
FOR THE DEGREE OF DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY
IN SOCIAL SCIENCE

EXAMINING COMMITTEE

CHAIRPERSON

Assistant Professor Dr. Pinkaew Laungaramsri

 MEMBER

Assistant Professor Dr. Chusak Wittayapak

 MEMBER

Lecturer Dr. Santita Ganjanapan

 MEMBER

Professor Dr. Anan Ganjanapan

 MEMBER

Dr. Olivier Evrard

THESIS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

 ADVISOR

Assistant Professor Dr. Pinkaew Laungaramsri

CO-ADVISOR

Assistant Professor Dr. Chusak Wittayapak

CO-ADVISOR

Lecturer Dr. Santita Ganjanapan

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This dissertation was completed with the assistance of many people.

First of all, my special acknowledgement must be made of Assistant Professor Dr. Pinkaew Laungaramsri, my thesis advisor. She patiently provided me a lot of her precious time for discussions, gave intellectual advice, read through my drafts of work many times, and led to the completion finally. The vital part of the conception of this thesis design owes to her broad yet deep knowledge of critical anthropology, development study, rural study, postmodernism, and feminism. I also would like to express my appreciation and sincere gratitude to Assistant Professor Dr. Chusak Wittayapak and Lecturer Dr. Santita Ganjanapan, the co-advisors of my thesis. Dr. Chusak primarily introduced me the trend of re-thinking agrarian study in the Third World and shared his extensive geographical knowledge of it, and Dr. Santita helped me to increase my information in terms of gender study and natural resource management.

Furthermore, I would like to extend my gratitude to Professor Dr. Anan Ganjanapan and Dr. Olivier Evrard. As external examiners, they read my thesis in a limited time, and Dr. Anan provided me valuable suggestions to sharpen my thesis as a whole, while Dr. Olivier gave me very detailed comments which was also helped me to improve my thesis. My thanks also go to Dr. Nongyao Nawarat, with whom I enjoyed readings of Harvey as well as feminization literatures, and to Dr. Robin Roth from York University, who generously spared time for discussion with me during her stay in Chiang Mai and provided me an idea of feminization of agriculture in the first place.

I owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Challenges of Agrarian Transition in Southeast Asia (ChATSEA) project, bases in Canada, not only for its provision of scholarship for my field research but also for what it gave me an opportunity to join international intellectual network for agrarian study. Sincere thanks also to Faculty of Social Sciences, Chiang Mai University for giving me a scholarship for editing the dissertation.

I am exceedingly grateful to the Dong Pa Sak villagers for giving me so much of their time in interviews in spare moments of their work in addition to providing accommodation, transportation, meals, not to mention their warm hospitality. I am also thankful to Thai NGO staff members from FTA Watch, Focus on the Global South, and Bio Thai, especially, Pi Ke, Pi Witoon, Sajin, and Ao, who willingly accepted my interview, allowed me to join their field trips and workshops, and shared their information about Thai FTAs. My thanks also to my relatives who provided me accommodation and transportation during my stay in Bangkok, and many other friends who accepted interviews about their garlic taste including Aer, Aom and her sister, another Aom, Phanagne, and Khaeg.

This work would not have been possible without the constant encouragement as well as intellectual exchange of friends in Ph.D program, especially, (Nong) Atchara Rakyutidharm, Nguyen Phuong Le, and Pi Natedao Taotawin. I will never forget the time we shared all our joys and difficulties in and outside of the campus. I am also indebted to Joseph Rickson from Macquarie University for patiently editing my English in a very short time despite his own study. Gary Morrison, an English editor of RCSD, Rajesh Daniel, and Daniel Powell also kindly helped me to edit my four articles, the earlier version of this thesis. Special thanks to (Baitong) Chanjitta Chanorn, who shared her economic insight with me as well. Furthermore, I am thankful to (An) Narita Chaithima, the staff of Ph.D program, and all the staff at the Regional Center for Sustainable Development (RCSD), Chiang Mai University, for their administrative as well as moral supports.

Outside of the campus, my deepest gratitude goes to my families both in Thailand and in Japan. My little daughter always gave me a smile during my thesis writing despite my shortness of time with her, and my husband supported me not only in private life but also as a best academic friend. My mother, sister, and brother always constantly encouraged me and sometimes gave me a financial support, believing my completion of the dissertation. It is only regrettable that I could not show the completion of this thesis to my father, who breathed his last breath during my Ph.D study.

Lastly, I must say that this dissertation is devoted to one person, Mr. Phiraphong Chatwatcharakamjorn or Ai Phong of Dong Pa Sak Village, who was a diligent garlic farmer in Dong Pa Sak Village, one of the leaders of a farmers' group in Northern Thailand, among the first to publicly express concern about trade liberalization of garlic in Thailand, and the very person who brought me an opportunity to do this research. He died involved in a traffic accident in September 2007 near his home. Although I could not hear all of his thought toward garlic production or agriculture, I do hope that this dissertation reflects his opinion in even the slightest terms.

Yuki Miyake