ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It has required great dedication and a lot of time for me to produce this thesis and to complete my Master's degree; however, this significant achievement is not entirely attributable to my own efforts. Without the help of my friends, family members, villagers and lecturers, and especially my thesis advisor and committee, it would have been impossible for me to complete my degree. I would therefore like to express my deepest gratitude to all those people who were influential, and who offered me inspiration; words are probably insufficient to express my feelings and appreciation here.

First of all, I owe a special debt to Prof. Dr. Yos Santasombat, my thesis advisor, who initially assigned me the task of reading a range of articles and who provided thoughtful considerations and useful comments on my early draft versions and then right to the end. I must also thank Prof. Emeritus Dr. Anan Ganjanapan, a member of my thesis committee, who was passionately involved and provided invaluable comments and scholarly assistance, as well as intellectual guidance, and more importantly useful articles which give me ideas on the issues surrounding Tonle Sap Lake, despite him having a busy schedule during my thesis writing period. I would also like to thank Dr. Paul Cohen, who gives me invaluable comments and insights during my thesis examination.

Special thanks should also go to all my classmates (from China, India, Laos, Myanmar and Vietnam), those who motivated me and buoyed my spirits - sharing fun and enjoyable experiences with me; and in particular my Thai friend, Mr. Supakit Janenoppakanjana, for helping me publish a journal paper. It has been a privilege to be their friend.

I was overwhelmed by the many Vietnamese villagers who showed me warm hospitality during my stay in Phat Sanday community, and they were also a key source of information for my empirical research. I was also impressed by the members of my own family, who were always there for me, giving me inspiration, encouragement and support while I was trying to complete my degree. Thank you all for being there and seeing me through these difficult times.

I would also like to express my special thanks to the Regional Center for Social Sciences and Sustainable Development (RCSD), for its financial backing. One of my greatest desires has always been to go on to higher education, and without the RCSD scholarship, I would not have been able to complete my degree and achieve my aim. RCSD provided me with a great opportunity - to study at Chiang Mai University and not only gain an insight into the academic world, but also cultivate and change my life, for I had to go through some difficult times during my studies here.

I would like to say ‘thank you’ to Ms. Muttika Thungsuphuti, who helped me translate my English abstract into Thai, plus Ms. Kanchana Kulpisithicharoen and the other RCSD staff, who were always on-hand and played a key role in facilitating the communications and support needed to maintain my involvement, as well as provide the secretarial support I needed.

Finally, I will close with a personal wish - that to some extent this thesis will help those other researchers interested in the Tonle Sap, and provide a link to the broader context of the lake, now and in the future, enriching the lives of all interested in this topic.
