ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is a great honor to have this opportunity to express my appreciation for the many people who have helped me bring this dissertation to fruition. It has been a very long journey to reach this final destination, and the journey has certainly not been as smooth as silk. I would humbly describe my work as an exploration of collective endeavors. I feel tremendous gratitude in many different ways for the kindness and encouragement of those who have helped me reach this moment. I am especially indebted to the below-mentioned people for whom without their support, this dissertation would not have become a reality.

Since the very early days of my Ph.D program at Chiang Mai University, Assistant Professor Dr. Kwanchewan Buadaeng, my main advisor, was and is most helpful in many different ways. She has not only been helpful with academic matters, but also with personal care throughout my living in Chiang Mai. Without her kindness, patience, and compassion in coaching my writing and guiding me on the right track, this dissertation would not have been completed.

I would like to thank all members of my dissertation and thesis defense examination committee, as without their intellectual guidance I would not have been as successful as I have been in the field of social sciences. Dr. M.R. Rujaya Abhakorn (Co-advisor) was helpful in walking me through the history of the past, while Professor Dr. Anan Ganjanapan (Co-advisor) helped provide me with a strong foundation in theoretical concepts of social science. The insightful criticism of Associate Professor Dr. Paul T. Cohen, who chaired the thesis examination, has been very helpful in revising my dissertation. I especially thank him for his additional written comments, suggestions, and critiques, not only during the defense of this defense, but during my qualifying examination in 2010 and proposal defense in 2012. Dr. Cohen has done much to broaden and shape my way of thinking. Professor Dr. Yos Santasombat, representing member of the Ph.D program in social sciences, pointed out my methodical approach required more appropriate clarity. For all their thoughtful and insightful comments and constructive suggestions during the examination session, these people have been my guiding light during the revision of my dissertation.

I would also like to thank academic officers in charge of different departments within the Faculty of Social Sciences, including Narita (Ann), who was and is most helpful in sorting out all my official administrative concerns. Muttika Thungsuphuti (Pong) and Ban Cheun were also very helpful during the initial stage of my arrival at CMU. Directly or indirectly, I am indebted to all RCSD-affiliated faculty members and staff of the Faculty of Social Sciences.

An independent researcher, Ajarn Suriya Smutkupt, was helpful in many ways, as he is very humble and can be easily approached in any setting. Time and again, we had conversations related to my research interests on Shan and northern Thai culture and belief systems. I also owe much gratitude to Dr. Kay Mohlman for her insightful academic consultation in general and academic journal paper writing in particular.

My thanks and gratitude also go to Phra Khammai (Ven. Professor Dr. Khammai Dhammasami), for we have had a fruitful, long-term student-teacher relationship. In 1995, when he originally invited me to join him on the Ceylon Journey, we had never met in person. In 2003, I first notified him that my thesis would cover some parts of his life and his endeavors for his people. Without his kindness and compassion in helping and nurturing me to study Sri Lanka, I would not be who I am today. This dissertation is dedicated in his honor. My thanks also go to Ven. Pannyavamsa Sengpan, a Ph.D graduate from Sri Lanka, now an assistant to Phra Khammai in Oxford, for sharing his experiences with me. Almost weekly I visited the Oxford Buddha Vihara - Singapore center during my 2014 fellowship at ARI-NUS, which I would like to thank for inviting me to a discussion with the abbot Ven. Vayaminda and other resident monks. Dr. Jotika Khur-Yearn, a University of London graduate, has been enthusiastic to discuss all of my inquiries as needed.

In addition, several friends who I have kept in touch with are among the people deserving my special thanks. Ven. Herngseng Pannyabhoga, a Ph.D candidate at Mahidol University, has been very helpful in gathering data, information, and other materials deemed necessary for my work. Without his assistance, the breadth of this dissertation would be severely lacking. Saosra Mongkut was always prepared to offer me a helpful hand whenever necessary. His free-and-easy style made approaching and consulting with him very comfortable. He remained patient through all of my topics of inquiry, ranging from history to Lik Long, to local Shan Buddhist practices and just about everything else. Sao Sirion, a long-time close friend, proved himself to be a ‘jack of all trades.’ Not only did he serve as my informant, but also as a financial supporter and a discussant for my enquiries into Khruba Bunchum’s activities. And I would like to thank Sai Hla Aung, a long-time friend who is now a lecturer at the Sariputta College, for his moral support.

Saosra Nando generously supported me financially from his own savings, and for that I am very much in his debt. Being friends since our time together in Sri Lanka, Bhante Dhammapala, a Ph.D graduate from the University of Hong Kong, also kindly contributed toward my financial needs during a time when I could not secure support from any other source. Ven. Sudhamma Samseng, a native of Kengtung and now the abbot of a temple in Rockford, Illinois, U.S.A., also contributed some finances. My thanks are also due to previous funders, including Thabye Education Networks and Supplement Grant Program - Asia (SGPA), a subsidiary of Open Society Institute, for partially supporting my costs of living in Chiang Mai and tuition fees for three years between 2009 and 2011. In 2012, the SEASREP Foundation kindly awarded me a research fellowship for one year. In 2014, the Asia Research Institute (ARI) of the National University of Singapore (NUS) awarded me an Asian Graduate Student Fellowship (AGSF) for which I remain very grateful.

A number of my colleagues and fellow Ph.D students from the past few years deserve special thanks for being excellent friends and companions during our educational journeys. Tirtha Thapa, who completed his Ph.D program early within three-and-a-half years, encouraged us all by presenting a very good example of ‘the early bird gets the degree.’ Sakkarin Na Nan and Chanjittra Chanorn were always ready to discuss any matters related to my student life. Our friendship made my life much more enjoyable during the period of my Ph.D studies. I would also like to recognize Duangkamon Donchaum for her moral support and positive criticism that alerted me to how I could improve my conceptualization of my dissertation. During the final revision of my dissertation, a memorable day was spent with Toom Mawk Harn, Ten Harn, and Wandee as we traveled to meet with Associate Prof. Dr. Paul Cohen at his home in Ban Kat, some 30 kilometers from Chiang Mai, for consultation. I would particularly like to thank them all for their thoughtful kindness and companionship at the end of this long journey!

Garrett Kostin, my dissertation editor, worked very hard with a special focus to complete the editing within a short period of time to enable me to meet my deadline for submission. I owe him gratitude for his kind assistance in polishing my language and helping me craft a more readable dissertation.

Last but not least, I would like to thank all my family members, especially my wife Sridarwan and daughter Wandee, for their patience. They have suffered and endured numerous difficulties due to the length of time it has taken me to complete my Ph.D. They have been incredibly eager to see the day when I will graduate. With every passing year, they imagined they would see me graduate among other students completing programs at CMU. Eventually, they could have been expected to lose faith that I would ever graduate at all. For continuing to support me through these unpredictable and challenging circumstance, I owe them my eternal gratitude.
